Dear Senators,

As you consider the current Continuing Resolution (H.R. 6500) moving through the Senate, we the undersigned 56 national and state public health, public safety, consumer protection, and community groups, ask that you consider an amendment to remove problematic language before passage. Included in the text is a provision to delay necessary hemp restrictions that were enacted by the House and Senate and signed into law by President Donald Trump.

Senator Ted Budd has filed amendment #6747 to strike the delay to ensure that the hemp restrictions are implemented on time on November 12, 2026. Doing so would keep easily accessible intoxicating hemp-derived THC products out of reach of vulnerable children.

Following passage of the 2018 Farm Bill, intoxicating hemp-derived THC products were made legal due to a loophole in federal law. As a result, manufacturers extracted and concentrated intoxicating cannabinoids from hemp and marketed them in gummies, vapes, beverages, and other products. Packaged with bright colors and candy-like branding, these products became widely available in gas stations, convenience stores, and grocery stores, where they were easily accessible to minors.

The consequences have been devastating. Children and teenagers are particularly vulnerable to the harmful effects of THC, are more likely to consume these products accidentally, and can develop dependence more quickly than adults. Poison control centers, emergency departments, and addiction treatment providers have reported significant increases in cases involving hemp-derived THC exposure, including severe and sometimes life-threatening outcomes. Most recently, a four-year-old child in Virginia died after consuming multiple delta-8 THC gummies found at home- a tragic reminder of the real dangers these products pose.

The intoxicating hemp industry has built a billion-dollar empire by exploiting this loophole using an addiction-for-profit model in ways that appeal to children in an effort to create life-long customers.

Recognizing these dangers, Congress closed the hemp loophole in the November 2025 appropriations bill by a 76-24 Senate vote. The Senate should adhere to the current timeline and permit a vote to strike the current hemp language in the CR.

We the undersigned 56 national and state public health, public safety, consumer protection, and community groups support Senator Budd's efforts to eliminate this delay. We also agree with the 35 state attorneys general who signed a letter asking Congress to oppose the delay. The lives of the American people, especially our children, depend on it.

Sincerely,
